This Newsletter to focus on Content. Yes, we still are proud to provide a best and world class “full university experience” of education plus entertainment, but today’s focus is upon knowledge rather than training, or networking, or having fun. We have post-PhD level lectures by the like of Jim Zack, Tom Polen, Darryl Townsend, Glen Palmer, Robert Sepanek, Dan Lund, Chris Carson, Keith Bergeron, John Owen, Raf Dua, and many others. We have panels to Compare the GAO and DCMA led by leaders of both Assessments, and multiple sessions to compare Desktop, Server and Cloud Delivery, compare CPM and Agile Scheduling, compare competing products to provide best solution and compare best user interface software solutions. We have sessions on mapping and planning not merely a project but rather your career by the like of Jeff Milo and Patrick Kelly.

We continue to provide sessions on “how to use” competing products for calculating the base CPM submittal, but also for the several competing products to analyze to improve or challenge submittals. These are not sales infomercials but range from basic navigation to “a deep dive” into the what and how of each product.

The Mock Trial, as always, will be a custom written play to illustrate competing legal theories and competing features of the softwares. The outcome is never known in advance - this chosen by the jury that is you.

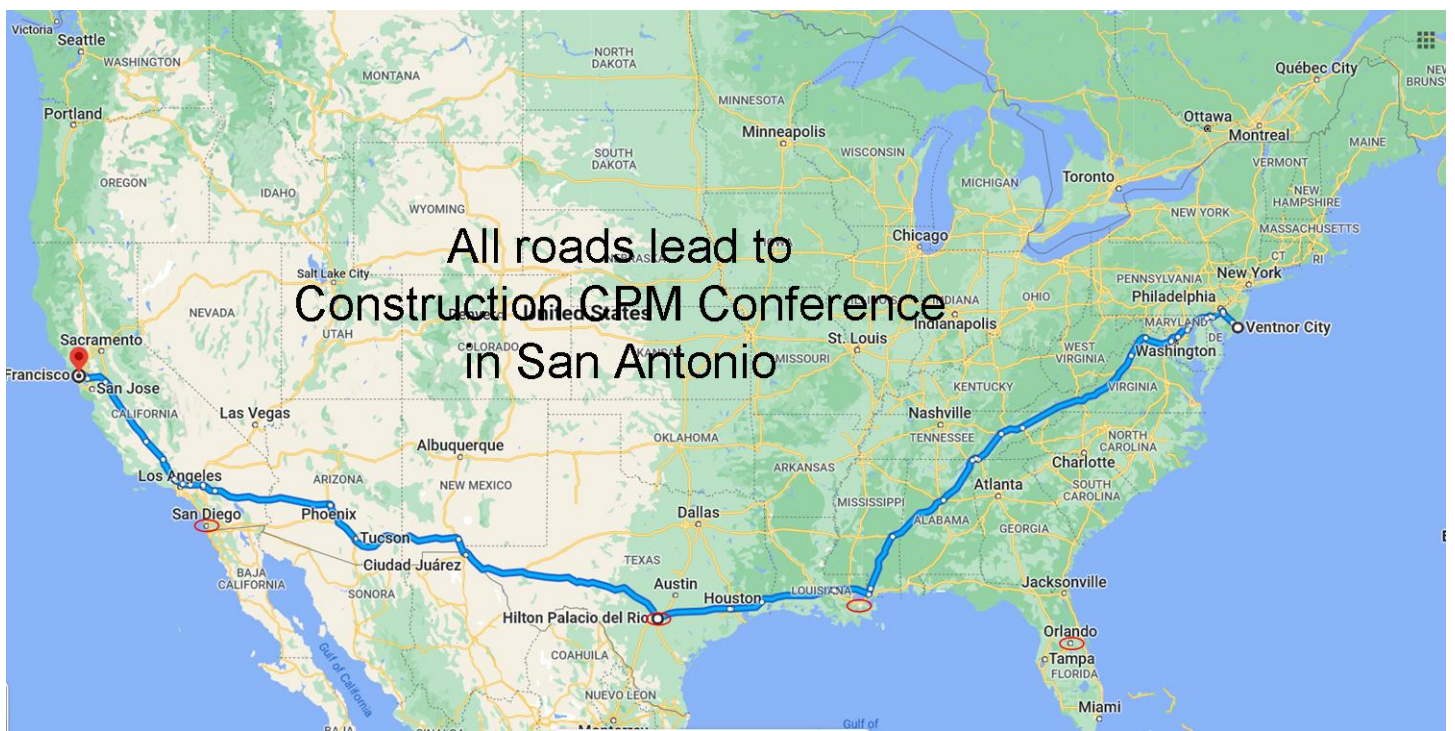

I hope to lead a panel where we discuss not the future but a future where contractors will be required to share intimate details of their bids, either by direct submission or by reverse engineering of the schedule submission utilizing deep business intelligence harnessed by powerful artificial intelligence computing. I suggest this is now possible. Don't miss this session. Be there to participate. Or join one of five other powerful concurrent sessions.
